Couples retie knot on Valentine's Day

Up to 60 years later, four couples in assisted living ready to commit again

By Judy Wakefield

When they married, they promised to stand by each other in sickness and health. Now, as many as 60 years later, four couples in their late-70s and 80s who still stand by each other through everything will be remarried this Valentine's Day.

All four couples live at Marland Place in Andover, an assisted living facility. In honor of these couples – and their love – Marland Place has planned a marriage-vow renewal ceremony tomorrow, Valentine's Day, complete with pretty dresses, fancy hairdos, suits and ties, flowers, favors and a reception.

A throng of family members will be on hand to applaud. They will be escorted to their seats by students from Merrimack College who have volunteered to usher and serve the reception meal. The Rev. Calvin Mutti, pastor of South Church in Andover, is officiating the 2 p.m. ceremony.

"They are so in love and respect each other so much and we have other couples like that. I knew we had to do something."

"Could there be a better Valentine's story?" asked Tracy Meech, who is social programs director at Marland Place and came up with the idea. "We just wanted to do something really special for these couples. Most of them are celebrating 60 years of marriage and that is a milestone these days."

It was Frances and Robert Vega who inspired Meech to organize the ceremony. At the Marland Place holiday party last December, they were showstoppers. Robert, who has Parkinson's disease, was wearing a tie that took nearly four hours to tie himself, while Frances, who has Alzheimer's, wore strapless high-heeled shoes, a pretty dress and her favorite shade of lipstick.

School choice mulled

Other towns' kids, cash into Andover schools?

By Ben Hellman

The School Committee will vote on a measure next week that could add more than $500,000 to the ailing school budget – but at the cost of increased class sizes.

School choice, which would allow students from other towns to attend Andover schools, could bring needed money to the schools, but the majority of the School Committee has expressed reservations or remained silent on the vote. The school administration has not taken a stance on the matter.

School choice would bring the schools $4,900 per out-of-town student attending Andover. The schools would control how many students were let in and which grade levels were open for consideration.

Superintendent Claudia Bach said kindergarten to grade 3 are possible grades to bring in students next year based on enrollment projections.

Vote could swing tax ax

Change would lower taxes for large numbers of seniors

By Andrea Gregory

A Town Meeting article could make a tax exemption available to thousands more Andover senior citizens, in part by lowering the age of eligibility from 70 to 65.

As it stands, the senior tax exemption article, proposed by the Board of Assessors, would amend the current regulations for a senior tax exemption in five ways. Though it proposed the article, however, the Board of Assessors would object to lowering the age of eligibility from 70 to 65 – one of the five possible changes – because of how many more people would be eligible for the exemption.

"Legislation allows for all those (five) options; now we need to decide which ones (to support)," says Chief Assessor Bruce Symmes.

"The Board of Assessors thinks they should accept all of the provision except for lowering the age," he says. "That would increase the amount of applicants."

According to Symmes, there are about 45 qualified applicants currently using the exemption in Andover. While any of the five provisions could increase the number of applicants, Symmes says he fears thousands might apply if the town decreases the age requirement.

Other people, however, say lowering the age should be supported because it will allow more Continued on page 5

Andoverite's research was on Columbia

By Ben Hellman

Andover High graduate and NASA science researcher Julie Litzenberger feels the human and scientific loss of the Columbia shuttle disaster every day, but says she looks to the future of space exploration with greater resolve. Litzenberger was involved with some of the experiments conducted by the crew.

Litzenberger works at the NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif., as an assistant researcher. Many of the experiments that were lost in the disaster came out of Litzenberger's center.

When the shuttle disintegrated reentering Earth's atmosphere, "people were devastated," says Litzenberger. Every day she walks by a memorial for the crew on her way to

One reason given for plant-upgrade effort

By Andrea Gregory

Andover residents will have to decide if $4,480,000 is too much to swallow for a water-treatment article that may have a different purpose than they believed last year.

A Town Meeting article will ask residents to support upgrading the ozone purification system at the water treatment plant. The system was installed in the 1980s, and Plant Superintendent John Pollano says it is at the end of its life cycle. Last year at Town Meeting, an article passed for the design of the new system and for "additional office and storage space," according to an explanation in the Finance Committee book. But the article had nothing to do with expanding the plant, or the amount of water treated, says Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski, who said he had been confused on the issue. "It was a huge misunderstanding last year," said Stapczynski. "It is not to expand the plant."

Stapczynski said last year's warrant article had nothing to do with expanding the amount of water pumped from Haggetts Pond, and nothing to do with selling water to other towns. According to him, the money approved last year was strictly about the design and what was being "expanded" was the technology, not the facility.

"What we're doing this year is taking out the old and putting in the new," said Stapczynski.

"Our main concern is supplying water to Andover," said Pollano, but Andover does have a contract to sell water to North Reading and parts of North Andover, which is part of the reason there has been no increase in

Town remembers teacher Hatem

By Laura Sellma

It was only two years ago when Robert "Bob" Hatem, Andover biology teacher and assistant varsity basketball coach, discovered that he had colon cancer at a routine physical exam.

"He was in disbelief," his wife, Joni Hatem, recalled. "He maintained a healthy lifestyle eating the right foods and getting plenty of exercise; he didn't smoke nor did he drink." However, during the surgery, it was discovered that the cancer had spread to the liver. Feb. 7, the cancer took its toll, and many in Andover were left missing Hatem. The basketball team canceled its game that night, and residents and teachers turned out to an emotional funeral and wake.

Hatem taught in the Andover school system for 35 years. Beginning in 1967, he taught at the East (and Doherty) Junior High School, until Andover High School became a four-year school in the late 1980s. "He loved the satisfaction of giving (kids) a problem and having them solve it on their own with his guidance," said Dave Fazio, physical education teacher and AHS varsity basketball coach.

In return, his students were also fond of him. Former student Kiran Raman, now a second-year medical student at UMass Medical School, recalled Hatem being intense and challenging. "You couldn't skate through his class. Yet, he was good-natured despite the many idiosyncrasies during lab experiments. How could I forget that lab when we had to maintain a steady water temperature? When the water became too warm, like an idiot, I dumped tons of ice into the water bath, causing the temperature to fall too dramatically. When he walked by my station, he just laughed."

"He found teaching rewarding," said AHS Principal Peter Anderson. "Students in Andover were interested and grateful in learning. Professionally he was happy and challenged."

His colleagues found him to be an inspiration. Noted Leo Lafond, long-time friend and AHS chemistry teacher, in his eulogy, "Bob, himself, became a role model for many of us who taught with him. In the classroom he was an absolute craftsman. He was smart, confident and skilled. He always knew what to teach and how to teach it."

Lafond described Hatem as a perfect match for coach David Fazio. "He offered a certain maturity, calmness and perspective that some might say Dave could use," said Lafond. "Before away games, Bob was very deliberate, walking around calmly getting things ready to go. Dave, on the other hand, would run around like the 'Ener-gizer Bunny' doing five different things at the same time while talking to two different people on his cell phone. The great thing was that despite their differences in pace, both Bob and Dave would be ready and boarding the bus at the same time. Dave still considers this one of the great mysteries of the world."

After 14 years of coaching with Hatem, Fazio learned a lot about strategy. Fazio confessed that his strategy on the court was, at times, more like a checkers game, while Hatem was always thinking ahead, like a chess master. "More importantly, he taught me it was a game, not a 'be all, end all,'" work. Lost Columbia astronaut Kalpana Chawla worked at the Ames center until 1994. Some of Litzenger's colleagues knew and worked with her. "It's very emotional coming into work. I can't imagine what it would be like (working) at Kennedy," she says.

Litzenger says she has co-workers who had dedicated the past two years to Columbia mission 107 — people who had not seen their families or children much during that time because of their work. The Jan. 16 blast-off was celebrated. "On the 16th we had a lift-off party with champagne," she says.

Litzenger's lab was waiting for several rats to be brought back from space as part of a bone loss study. It has been proven that humans lose bone mass in low and zero gravity environments, but Litzenger says, after some time in these environments, the rate of bone loss slows or stops. Her lab would have further studied the whys and hows of low-gravity bone loss.

loss. Now, all the scientific data from Columbia is lost, along with the astronauts. "What we were going to do, we can't do," says Litzenger.

Litzenger and others are waiting to see exactly what affect this disaster will have on the space program and their lives. "Columbia was the workhorse for science missions," she says.

Litzenger believes human space exploration is important and must continue. As a child, she feigned illness to stay home to watch the Challenger lift off. That disaster did not deter her love for space exploration. Asked if she would still become an astronaut if given the chance, she says, "Definitely. If anything the strength of my resolve (is greater). If only to keep space exploration going."

Litzenger believes NASA would not have done anything to put the astronauts lives in jeopardy. She says the astronauts lives were lost in the service of life goals. "They died because they really believed in what we were doing up there," she says.

Litzenger noted she was speaking only for herself and that her views and opinions do not necessarily reflect those of NASA or the Ames Research Center.

Dog licenses

Dog license renewal notices were sent to resident dog owners in mid-December. "There has been a great response to the dog license renewal notice with more than 1,500 dogs licensed to date. However, there are many dogs that have not yet been licensed," reports the town clerk's office. Any dog licensed after February will include a cumulative administration fee of $2 per month.

Residents may register dogs at the town clerk's office from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. They may also register through the mail by sending a check payable to the Town of Andover for $10 and a current certificate of rabies vaccination, to the Town Clerk's Office, 36 Bartlett St., Andover.

Townsmen staff honored as best in New England

The Andover Townsman won two first-place awards on Saturday for being the best weekly of its size in New England, as part of the New England Press Association's annual competition.

More than 250 New England newspapers submit about 5,000 entries to the NEPA contest each year. Winners Tim Jean, a photographer, and editor Neil Fater were competing against photographers and columnists from all New England weeklies with circulations of more than 6,000.

Tim Jean won first place for "General News Photograph," for a shot of Andover's Cerullo family hugging at a vigil in the Park following the September 11 attacks.

The judges said the photo's "nice tight moment captures the emotion of the event well."

Neil Fater won his first place in the category of "Serious Columnist."

Columnists must submit two samples of their work. One of Fater's columns told the story of a woman who believes St. Jude, on separate occasions, saved both her and her son. The other was about Andover men in the senior tax-voucher program who battle flies and illegal dumpers in exchange for a $500 tax credit.

"The details and active voice made this a clear winner. Both are refreshing pieces that tell stories with a greater meaning," said the judges, in part. "Very community oriented, fair and plugged in."

Town favoring longer trash-disposal deal

Andover Public Works Director Jack Petkus said he favors Andover accepting the longest plan offered by Wheelabrator North Andover to handle town trash disposal, a plan that would lock Andover into a four-year, nine-month contract.

Andover currently pays $145 per ton for trash disposal, twice the amount paid by many other towns. Come 2005, that will no longer be the case.

The four-year, nine-month contract has costs starting $64 per ton the first year and rising to $68, $69.50 and $71 in the following years. The cost would be $73 for the last nine months.

Though no votes were actually taken on this issue at Monday's selectmen's meeting, officials unanimously acknowledged they believe the longer option is the right one.

"I would second that. At least we will have a secure price," said Buzz Stapczynski, town manager. "I vote in favor of security."

Petkus will be attending a Feb. 25 meeting in Acton for the 23 North East Solid Waste Committee communities that use Wheelabrator to dispose of their trash. Members from each community will cast nonbinding votes at that time to determine where each community stands.

Andover and Lawrence

Two towns, one feeling

By Ben Hellman

When Andover student Heather Flemming walks into a room at the Lawrence Boys and Girls Club, several children scream her name in sheer excitement. Flemming says her exits are even more dramatic. "They attach themselves to your legs," she says.

Flemming, an Andover High sophomore who often joins the kids in playing with clay, is one of more than two dozen Andover High volunteers who are greeted on Thursdays with smiles and squeals of delight from the club kids who await their arrival.

Last Thursday, the Andover kids had an even more emotional visit than usual. The Andover students gave $1,581 they had raised to the families of the boys who drowned in the river accident in December. Some of the Andover High volunteers were so affected by the drowning accident they decided to try to help the families by raising money. "I personally knew some of the kids. I helped them with their homework. It was a pretty big deal," said sophomore Sam Berger.

Berger and fellow AHS sophomores and Andover Youth Council members John Formichella and Liz Minton were in town offices during a selectman's meeting shortly after the tragedy and decided to ask for air time to appeal to Andover residents for money to help the families. "We just asked them to cooperate and give (the families) whatever they could. It was around Christmastime and they must have been having a terrible time," said Formichella.

The fundraising effort was appreciated, but it's the time and energy the students give to the children at the club every week that impresses Andover native and club volunteer coordinator, Margaret (Pike) Cronin.

Cronin says she's seen the number of AHS volunteers swell to 27 from three during this school year. The number grew not from a program at school, but by word of mouth among students. "It makes me proud to be from Andover," says Cronin, an AHS grad herself.

Every Thursday afternoon, Cronin picks up a group of AHS students to spend three hours at the club. The volunteers help the kids with homework, listen to them read aloud, play games, make crafts and just spend time the Lawrence children. Cronin was a volunteer herself for six years before going to work at the club part-time. "Once someone volunteers they really get hooked. You get much more than you give," she says.

The rewards are apparent. Formichella spent time Thursday listening to 10-year-old Natalie Leta read from Yertle the Turtle. Natalie squirmed in her seat and obviously wanted to spend the time talking to Formichella instead. "I know all these girls and guys. You get closer with them every week," he says.

rates. According to Pollano, Andover's rates are in the lower third of the state. He said the average household pays $302 per year for water. If the new equipment is installed, a $21 per year increase will go into effect in 2008. Pollano also said that in 30 years there have only been two new hires, and the upgrade will require no additional staff.

Andover treats billions of gallons of water every year using the ozone purification system installed in the 1980s. According to Pollano, there's a 15- to 20-year life cycle for the equipment and it's at the end of its life cycle.

The ozone system currently in place hasn't been used since the beginning of January; Pollano said he expects three months to pass before it's up and running again. Since the system is down for repairs they have had to convert back to using powder activated carbon which primarily deals with color and odor problems, as opposed to the ozone system, which physically removes particulate matter, bacteria and algae.

"Ozone goes a long way," he said. "It does oxidize metals."

Pollano says it's common to go offline for a few weeks in the winter due to basic maintenance, but those weeks are now months and the amount of time the system is offline will continue to grow with the age of the equipment.

"We're doing the work in a planned way versus an emergency," Pollano said.

TAX EXEMPTION

Andover seniors to remain in their homes.

"I support affordable options in the community and this is one of them," says Jeanne Madden, director of Elder Services. "It's very important to keep a cross-section in the community."

The five proposed senior tax exemption changes are:

- raising the net income limit for a single person from $13,000 to $20,000, and for a married couple from $15,000 to $30,000;

- raising the limits on total assets from $28,000 to $40,000 for singles, and from $30,000 to $55,000 for married couples;

- allowing seniors in four-bedroom homes, rather than just those in one-, two- or three-bedroom homes, to deduct the value of their real estate;

- increasing the possible deduction available to seniors from $500 to $1,000; and

- lowering the age requirement for the exemption from 70 to 65.

Symmes says lowering the age to 65 "would be very expensive to the community," but could not offer any specific numbers without knowing how many people would take advantage of the change.

Although many residents might qualify for an altered exemption, Madden believes only a small number would actually take advantage.

"For the most part people don't choose it unless they really, really need it," she says.

But she also says it's opportunities like this that can allow a whole category of people to stay in Andover and pay their taxes.

"We hear a lot about people having difficulties with the raise in taxes," she says. "I think there's a good rationale for changing it."

She says changes in the article and discussion at Town Meeting could change her opinion, but she currently supports lowering the age.

Vows for Valentine's: Saying 'I do' once more

MARRIAGE VOWS

"They dressed for a party and looked terrific," said Meech. "They are so in love and respect each other so much and we have other couples like that. I knew we had to do something."

June 24 will mark the Vegas' 59th wedding anniversary and Robert remembers his wedding day in 1944 like it was yesterday.

He originally met Frances at Rockaway Beach in New York and the two wrote many letters while he served in the war. They married after his honorable discharge, but there were no ushers because all of his buddies were still away in the military. The couple had just bridesmaids at their ceremony - eight of them. Since then, every week of their nearly 59 years together, Robert has brought Frances a bouquet of fresh flowers.

"I remember asking her father to marry her and that was in February that year. I also remember that I was late for work that day," said Robert, who is 82 and worked as a chief draftsman for many years while Frances, 79, worked as a seamstress.

They formerly lived in New York and had a condominium in Methuen before they moved to Marland Place a year ago. They have two sons.

Robert said it's "an equal partnership" attitude on all issues that makes a marriage work and "you've got to have plain old fun together."

Daniel Puffer, who married his wife Eleanor in 1942 and is also taking part in the vow renewal ceremony, says "you can't think you're always right" if you want your marriage to work.

The Puffers, who had to take a canoe to their secluded honeymoon spot in Lower Camp, Maine, have been at Marland Place for six months. They live in the Pathways Unit, reserved for folks with Alzheimer's, and are probably best known as the king and queen of hand-holding.

Eleanor's eyes sparkle at every meal, as she turns to her husband before she eats and says, "I love you, Danny."

Former avid travelers who enjoyed spending numerous Christmases in Bermuda, they married in Leominster in 1942. They formerly lived in Royal Crest apartments in North Hank and Barbara Spencer, who will renew their vows this Valentine's Day, are long-time West Andover residents.

Andover and have two children.

Ann Crocker, 81, laughs at how her marriage got off to a terrific start. Her first-born was a girl and marked the first girl in the Crocker family in 75 years. It was a big deal and her new mother-in-law, who had five sons, was delighted.

She and David Crocker were married on April 2, 1943, after meeting at a dance for servicemen in South Carolina. David, who grew up in Westford, served in the Air Force and they waited until he was out of the service to marry.

Tomorrow's renewal ceremony will be a second-time-around for this couple, as they renewed their wedding vows on their 25th anniversary. They have three children.

"I am looking so forward to it," said Ann. "I was so pleased to do it the first time around and now I'm happy to do it again."

The Crockers live in an apartment in Marland Place, as David uses a walker and Ann said she forgets things. While looking back on their nearly 60 years together, David said a successful marriage is all about understanding.

"You have to understand what the other one needs," he said.

Hank and Barbara Spencer are longtime West Andover residents who moved to Marland Place last month. They are also renewing their vows. They met while hiking in the White Mountains and are celebrating 38 years of marriage this year.

Over the years, they've enjoyed a mutual fondness for outdoor sports and music. Hank, 67, was always a computer buff who worked in software quality assurance for years.

While reflecting on their many years together, Hank summed it up eloquently.

"There's a growing recognition that the rosy glasses are replaced by various levels of tolerance," he said.

But he won't offer any reflection on his advice to young couples who are just starting their marriage journeys this Valentine's season.

"Young couples are in love," he says, "they are not listening to much of anything."

Daniel and Eleanor Puffer are known for walking all over Marland Place while holding hands.

Why choose to stuff schoolrooms?

SMALL CLASS SIZES. They are the Holy Grail of education. Parents, teachers and administrators all eagerly await the day of small class sizes, desiring fewer students per teacher whenever and wherever possible. In a letter published today, a School Committee member calls small class sizes the second-most critical factor in "delivering a high quality, high performance education." When Andover elected to spend millions building the two new schools that opened in September, many parents' greatest hope was that the new space would lead to less crowded school buildings immediately – and smaller class sizes eventually. The schools were needed, everyone said, to keep Andover's other school buildings from bursting at the seams.

Why, then, now that the new schools are built, would Andover choose to inflate the size of its classrooms? The School Committee is considering school choice, which would allow Andover to collect money from other communities to allow their students to attend school here. It would have to be one heck of a compelling argument to consider this, even in the least crowded classroom, given educators' proclamations about the importance of class size. If the reasons for choosing school choice are financial, the town would be better off making contractual and Town Meeting decisions that don't bind the town to budgets it cannot afford without an override.

Web question

Is school choice the correct move?

Last week's Townsmen Web-site question was:

As a result of turning down thermostats in Andover schools, $134,000 will be saved per year. Changing the temperature setting from 70-72 degrees to 68-70 degrees, a seemingly small change should save big bucks, but is there anything wrong with it?

36 people voted as follows:

- Because of a technical problem with the company that handles the Townsmen poll, the first option – "I see nothing wrong and if it's saving that much money what's wrong with bringing it down even further. Wearing a sweater never hurt anyone." – could not be chosen.

- 32, or 89 percent, said "I keep my house between 68 and 70. These kids aren't freezing."

- 3, or 8 percent, said "It's easy enough for kids to get sick. The middle of winter is not the time to start playing around with heat in the school."

- 1, or 3 percent, said "Other."

This week's question:

School choice – charging other towns to let their kids attend Andover schools – could help save teachers' jobs and valued educational programs, but at the expense of larger classes. Raising class sizes in grades K-3 to the midpoint of the current enrollment policy could bring in more than $500,000. At $4,900 a student, is it worth it?

- Yes, but only in classes that have the fewest students.

- Yes, the schools should take full advantage of school choice, putting as many students in classrooms as they can hold. We need the money.

- No, it takes the best students and state dollars away from poorer school systems.

- No, people who don't pay Andover taxes shouldn't be allowed to enjoy the Andover schools.

Senior center fills 'real need'

Editor, Townsmen:

I think it is time for some of us Andover seniors to speak up and talk about people who are working for our benefit.

I am a frequent user of our current senior center, and it fills a real need in my life.

When I first retired, after working out of town for more than 20 years, I really needed a place to meet people and find some new interests. The center was a boon to me. We see new people entering into our circle constantly, people new to the community, new to the retired life, or newly losing their life partners, and we all need companionship with our peers.

Our senior center staff does a good job of finding interesting programs for all types of people. Seniors have been very fortunate to also have a group of interested, energetic people working on the Senior Center Task Force to help with the need for more room for programs. They have listened to our concerns that programs have had to be limited and people turned away because of space. They have heard our concerns about parking and location and have spent much time to come up with plans and alternatives for more space. I think because they have shown interest and seen our needs they have been able to get our selectmen and town boards to support their recommendations and we appreciate this.

Hopefully, Andover can join other surrounding towns and have a center that can house and accommodate more programs so that all our seniors can be productive and happy in their later years.

Day, give your loved ones new GE SmartHome Security and Surveillance devices.

I know what you're thinking. Here's another company insulting everyone's intelligence on the off chance that they'll make a buck doing it. Isn't it enough that this day of love is really a day to sell processed sugar and trite expressions wrapped in cellophane? When it comes to love, do we really need to say it with surveillance?

But this column will not rail against the sweeping and creeping tide of commercialism. In fact, I'll even assist companies in targeting people dumb enough to be convinced that a coffee maker is a fine Valentine's gift for their wife – because it will perk her up.

Below are some Valentine's Day pitches companies might want to consider. After all, there's still one shopping day left. I've modeled the sales

Valentine's Day, like spring, is a day when a young man's thoughts turn to... home security systems.

At least, that's what some marketer over at General Electric appears to think. Here's a real e-mail from the company that arrived in time for this week's paper: Feeling safe and secure in a relationship is important. So is feeling safe and secure in your home. This Valentine's pitches after the fine example from GE:

Keeping the heat in a relationship is important. So is heating your home. Give your loved one a new boiler.

I mean, if you don't have hot water to get out of, what do you have?

The power of love is amazing. So is the sucking power available to clean your carpets nowadays. Give your man a vacuum.

Most guys do love power tools.

Your lover's skin is wonderfully smooth. Her shirts should be too. Give her an iron.

Why bother with flowers? A woman + a home appliance + Valentine's Day... can you say romance? Better set that baby on "steam."

OK, by now you're thinking "there's no way any company would do something like that." Believe me, they send worse. One that arrived while I wrote this referenced Groundhog Day for a paragraph before launching into a pitch that the groundhog "should be a signal for Americans to be on the alert for allergy symptoms."

If I could send out only one e-mail, it would go to these alleged marketing phenoms, and would read as follows:

Most promotional tie-ins are ludicrous. So are you, the people who send them to our homes. Give us a break.

And some chocolate, if you like.

Teacher: For many of us, it is all about the kids

Editor, Townsmen:

This letter is in response to Taylor Armerding's column "Sometimes it's not all about the children," which ran in the Feb. 6 Townsmen. It is important that Armerding and the citizens of Andover know that this past Wednesday night, for two hours from 6:30 until 8:30 p.m., 11 Andover schoolteachers volunteered their time to participate in an evening seminar at Andover High School. These 11 teachers, and this one event, are only brief examples of the many teachers who contribute time far beyond their contract because they believe teaching is "all about the kids." Even more important, however, is that four of those 11 teachers who participated had been notified earlier in the week that their jobs were in jeopardy. They showed up anyway.

This bears repeating. Even though these four teachers knew they were likely to lose their jobs, they showed up anyway.

Armerding should refrain from over-generalizing about teachers. For many of us in the Andover Public School system, it is "all about the kids."

I know the members of the student clubs that sponsored Wednesday's seminar would like to show appreciation to all the teachers who made it possible – especially Laura Pierce, Ali Fine, Kathy Crowley, and Wayne Puglisi, for showing up anyway.

Sewers for sisters, not 115+ others

Editor, Townsmen:

At the Town Meeting in April 1997, voters approved Article 36, which allowed Andover to enter an inter-municipal sewer agreement with the town of Tewksbury and the city of Lowell. This was in direct response to a plea from the Poor Clare Sisters saying:

"We, the Poor Clare Sisters of 460 River Road, Andover, Massachusetts, must relocate our monastery because we cannot continue to support/maintain our three-story building. In addition, our aging community has dwindled to 14 sisters. Just in the past year, six of our sisters have passed away. Given our reality, we desperately need to build a smaller one-story monastery and we petition that disposal services and water be permitted. Please help us out of this dilemma, knowing we shall keep you in our prayers."

"Respectfully, Sr. Therese Lacroix, Abbess"

This was the only explanation provided for the warrant article and was the basis for the approval at Town Meeting.

The inter-municipal agreement finalized in December 1998 specifically states the agreement is for the "express and exclusive purpose of extending the sewer connection to the new residence to be constructed for the Sisters of the Franciscan Monastery of St. Clare at 445 River Road (Assessor's Map 229, Lot 1)." This was in accordance with the vote of the people at Town Meeting.

In May 2002, the selectmen voted 3-2 to approve an amendment to the inter-municipal agreement. This amendment would allow the property at 460 River Road, former site of the Poor Clare Monastery and proposed site of Avalon at St. Clare (a 115-unit apartment complex) to connect to the sewer line. It is noteworthy that the two selectmen who voted against the amendment were the only two serving the town at the time of the original vote. As reported in the May 23, 2002 Townsmen, "Selectman John Hess voted

A walk down memory lane, via Main Street

Editor, Townsmen:

I enjoyed your recent article on long-running Main Street businesses. I have seen many changes downtown in my 33 years at the corner of Main and Pynchard Avenue. As the Townsmen's weekly "Past and Present" photos show, the physical appearance of downtown has not changed greatly but many of the well-known faces and businesses are gone.

In the early 1970s, downtown Andover had it all. In addition to the Town Hall, library and Post Office, it was the site of banks and churches, specialty shops and professional offices, restaurants and bars, gas stations, a funeral home, a business school, a bowling alley and even a junkyard.

The Andover Spa was our convenience store. The Andover Cooperative Society and Purity Supreme were our supermarkets. We had two hardware stores, Milton Cole's and Hill's, where Rob Hill and Bob Reddish could somehow find that nut or bolt you needed.

Olde Andover Village was a vital part of downtown. It was anchored by the Andover Book Store under the caring hands of Jerry and Ethel Cross. Nearby was the Lantern Brunch were Tony and Claire Nicosia served great food with a side order of humor. Next door was a classy lady, Marian Carpentier, who proudly ran Yankee Lady. Bill Feldman could be seen behind the counter at Williams's Jewelry. Sutherland's was managed by the personable Lucille Barrett. And upstairs at Smart & Flagg, Claire McCarthy efficiently serviced her customers' insurance. Across the street, there was Fred Teichert's Andover Stationers and Bob Gigas' Sam's Luncheonette.

At the corner of Pynchard Avenue, the always proper Dr. Harry East cared for his patients, and Atty. Anna Greeley wisely counseled clients.

Who does not remember the Andover Gift House, so lovingly stocked by Austin Anderson, or Andover Gulf where Billy Tynan pumped gas singing Irish songs?

Millie Vogel outfitted her customers at the Taylor Shop. George and Charlie Heseltine cheerfully handled our sporting goods needs at Dana's, Nick Aznoian's House of Clean kept us cleaned, pressed and starched. Macartney's offered fine clothing and the personal service of Bob Gardner, John Zenovitch and Alex Milne.

We had three local druggists. At Simeone Pharmacy, Buddy and his dad filled our prescriptions. At Hughes', Alan and clerk Adelaide Shorten serviced us. Druggist Jim Sullivan and clerk Elinore Armitage were fixtures at Hartigan's, as was the white marble soda fountain.

Several realtors had offices, such as Lee Dodd, Beverly Darling, Doug Howe Sr., John Hewitt and the Dohertys.

And of course there was Ford's Coffee Shop, where Tom Koravos happily cooked and Stella charmed the customers, famous and otherwise. Bill and Jim Doherty, and Sid White presided over the large, center table where town officials and Andover businessmen tried each noon to solve the problems of the town.

Congratulations to all the long-running Main Street businesses. Best wishes for many more years of success. It has been a pleasure being a small part of downtown Andover.

School Committee member

Paper should quote all voices

Editor, Townsmen:

In the article "Leaders inch towards cuts, priorities" (Townsmen, Jan. 30, page 1) the Townsmen quoted officials with respect to the budget crisis, and in doing so, offered a somewhat misleading assessment of the ideas generated at the school budget forums.

Nothing inaccurate, perhaps, but by not presenting what I consider a balanced viewpoint, one would think that the forums offered only suggestions on reductions. Specifically, School Committee member Chris Smith was quoted as saying he "heard repeated calls for raising class sizes," as well mentioning some items that are being looked at to get us through the current budget crisis.

I suppose this was one of the drawbacks of the forums ... if you went to them predisposed to hear something, you certainly heard it. That is because many, many items were offered by the community as suggestions to be considered. All were valuable, but readers of the Townsmen need to know that all were not to do with cutbacks and reductions. For myself, I heard quite the opposite of Chris. I heard many parents implore us to not increase class sizes.

In fact, the three predominant themes I heard, level by level, were:

- Andover High School - continue to enable students, to the extent possible, to take 7.5 credits per year.

- Middle school - that the middle-school model was considered more valuable than the junior-high model.

- Elementary - Keep class sizes as low as possible.

In all three levels, keeping class sizes low were repeatedly called for. Indeed, most educational leaders will tell you that, after the factor of a high parental involvement in their child's education, teacher-to-student ratios is the critical factor in delivering a high quality, high performance education.

I would encourage anyone interested to visit the Andover Public Schools Web site (www.aps1.net) and see the results of the forums conducted at the three levels. I would further encourage the Townsmen to report stories that are balanced. Space and deadlines are not excuses for publishing comments that suggest such a narrow focus.

We have a rich and diverse community of people passionately involved in educational excellence. All of their voices should be heard.

against the amendment because he chose to uphold what he considered Town Meeting's intention in 1998. 'It's not our place to change a Town Meeting vote,' he said." We couldn't agree more. This was not the intent of the approval vote issued at Town Meeting. Such a decision should have been returned to the people for their vote due to the significant changes in nature and scope.

For these reasons, I have filed a warrant article to rescind the amendment approved by the selectmen last May. The people of Andover must vote in good conscience for what is clearly before them. They were not given the opportunity in this case.

Sweating loss of physical ed teacher

Editor, Townsmen:

It was with true sorrow that I read the newspaper last Thursday, as I saw that Meredith Emery will be one of the casualties of Andover's school budget crisis. While I do understand the realities of budgets, it is very sad to see someone of such a high caliber being lost to the town of Andover.

Emery makes everyone around her happy to be there. She was able to create an atmosphere of happiness, and an understanding that anyone can achieve fitness. She transformed many of her less-than-enthusiastic physical education students into willing participants in something fun. She is one of those teachers who can definitely say that they made a difference.

Her students will remember her, with fondness, for their entire lives.

I am fortunate that my children were able to experience the wonderful teaching that Emery exhibited. I feel sorry for all those future Andover children who will miss out having such a warm, enthusiastic and great teacher.

added Fazio. "The game can consume you, yet win or lose, you go home to those kids and you kiss and enjoy them."

Outside of the school arena, Hatem was described as being a meticulous, well-organized individual. Fondly, Lafond recalled earlier times: "The books were perfectly parallel with the edges of the desk. I used to love going by and moving them slightly when he wasn't watching and then tell him how disappointed I was that book 3B was out of position by 10 degrees."

Hatem was also meticulous with his carpentry. He taught himself cabinetry, and built chests, decks, and hardwood floors. He had hoped that after he retired in June 2003, he would continue the trade, especially building furniture, which he loved to do.

TOWN TALK

Andover High grad is a hero for her September 11th efforts

Susan Gerstberger Goggin

Peter Gerstberger remembers the days when his daughter Susan was an Andover High School student with a competitive edge. Now, she's been recognized as a national hero.

Susan, whose married name is Susan Goggin, was given the Julie Y. Cross Award and the Valor Award this summer for her efforts on September 11 as a secret service agent in New York. Goggin's experience on that day was described in a front-page article in the Sept. 20, 2001 Townsmen.

"There are a lot of heroes," said Peter Gerstberger. "She just happened to be one under very difficult circumstances."

According to mom Maureen Gerstberger, Goggin was involved in AIDS research at the National Institute of Health in Maryland before joining the secret service.

"After doing AIDS research, it didn't sound any more dangerous," said Maureen Gerstberger.

The parents are more proud than worried about their daughter, and say she does a good job of checking in and keeping in touch with them.

It's a long way from the Andover High diving team, but the Gerstbergers still see their daughter as the determined young lady she was when growing up in Andover.

"Whatever she sets her mind to, she achieves," said Peter Gerstberger.

Fatal frolic for Henrietta

Andover's resident turkey — dubbed Henrietta by some — died last week after being hit by a car near the intersection of Elm Street and Route 114.

Playful, but pesky, she startled many neighbors of that area with her daily visits to their backyards, including those on Brookfield Road, located off Elm Street.

Helen "Skip" Eccles, of Brookfield Road, said she saw Henrietta at least once every two days for a long time. In fact, Henrietta once avoided a neighborhood dog by flying to a tree in Eccles' front yard. Henrietta parked there for several hours.

"I think a lot of people miss Henrietta," Eccles said, adding "she was a very game bird."

Hockey parents crowd Old Town Hall

And at Silk 'n' Satin benefit for ATHM, Andover Inn serves chocolate to die for...

For Cupid, he's seen you tying those skates, Driving where'er the schedule dictates; Knows you've been up many times with the sun,

And his only "goal" now is to show you some fun!

— From the invitation for ANDOVER HOCKEY ASSOCIATION'S annual social

ANDOVER HOCKEY PARENTS put the sticks, skates and schedules aside last Saturday night and treated themselves to their annual social at Old Town Hall on Main Street.

It was Andover Hockey Association's annual get-together for all those parents involved with the program.

Organizer Pam Driscoll said about 200 people attended the event, which included a buffet-style dinner and music courtesy of a deejay. Guests took part in a live auction and raffle, with a portion of the proceeds going to AHA's scholarship program. That program is available to local families who need assistance with membership costs, Driscoll said.

The chuck-a-puck event brought lots of laughter as guests paid $5 to take five shots at a knee hockey net. There were bells attached to the top of the net, and shooters who hit the bells received prizes.

Tina Walker, a diehard hockey mom whose three sons play hockey, handed out consolation knee hockey sticks to shooters who couldn't get the puck "upstairs" and missed the bells. That group of not-so-sharp-shooters was pretty lengthy (and included this reporter).

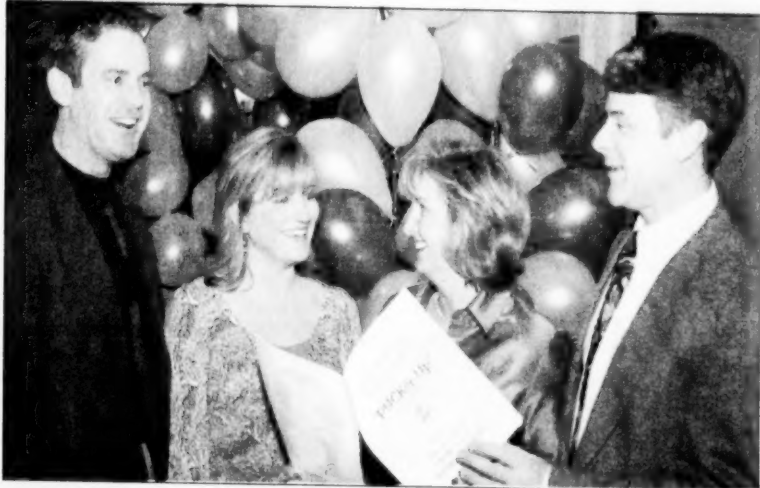

Bob Barry handled the master of ceremony duties for the live auction, which featured lots of tickets to professional sporting events, tee times on local golf courses and memberships to health clubs.

Organizers said the get-together

Bottle deposits fuel parties

Andover Commons residents pour on the fun with empties

By Andrea Gregory

MOST PEOPLE RETURN BOTTLES and cans after their big parties. But at Andover Commons, the senior citizens' complex on Railroad Street, residents recycle their bottles before the parties.

Then they use the cash to throw a better bash.

Every third Thursday of the month, the Commons throws a birthday party with a seasonal theme — such as one for Valentine's Day.

For the past three years, rental manager Roberto Alvarez De Sotomayor says he has returned residents' bottles with deposits and used the money to improve the parties because he wanted to do more for his tenants than what the management budget covers. He sees this effort not only as a way to improve the quality and fun of the events, Roberto Alvarez De Sotomayor, rental manager at Andover Commons, shows what his "elves" have collected — lots of bottles to return for the deposit money and celebrate on a regular basis.

but as something that has built a greater sense of community.

"They see the whole thing working and they are part of it," said De Sotomayor, calling them a joyful group of people.

His vision of live music and tables with holiday decorations has taken shape. The participation of the residents resulted in 3,000 bottles and cans collected last year, and De Sotomayor is not expecting any fewer this year.

"Every Friday my trunk is full," he said. "Now I got an SUV, which is bigger."

According to De Sotomayor, these events are popular among the residents and give them something to look forward to every month. He also mentioned he'll probably be singing at the upcoming Valentine's Day party since the live music fell through this time.

er happens every February and has been held for the past few years. It's always a hit, they said, proved by the sold-out crowd.

So, the party "goal" was met and it was a winning shot.

Sure, lots of snow fell last Friday, but when it comes to satisfying a sweet tooth, Andoverites don't let snow slow them down. The American Textile History Museum in Lowell had their fourth annual "Silk 'n' Satin" benefit, which featured dessert stations many chocolate lovers can only dream of. Andover Inn was among the several participating restaurants.

Museum publicist Lois Frankenberger of Andover said Andover Inn general manager Marc Broekoff and executive chef Patricia Stella greeted guests at their station with "a beautiful presentation of puff pastry with chocolate cream and chocolate ganache."

About 100 people attended and immediately started to work off those chocolate calories as live music was provided by the Winiker Orchestra. Andover attendees included Jeannie Antonioni, Larry Ardito, Buck and Joyce Bakshi, Cindy Bernstein, Rob and Shannon Bloemker, Geoff and Helen Booty, Sophia Caffray, Linda Carpenter, Linda Cleary, David and Katherine Dietz, Eileen and Ken Doherty, Rachel Garcia, Kate and Rich Goglia, Chris and Martha Grant, Betsy and Bill Hansen, Larry and Renita Johnson, Debbie Martin, Cynthe and Don Roberson.

Katherine Dietz of Andover chaired the sweet time and had help from committee members Helen Booty and Renita Johnson, also both of Andover.

The snow did cancel a family pizza party planned for last Friday at Old Town Hall. It was a Department of Community Services bash that had attracted more than 100 interested Andoverites. DCS director Mary Donohue said the event has been rescheduled for Friday, March 14.

SHAPING THE COURTS

The Hon. John E. Fenton Jr. (right) of Andover, distinguished professor of law at Suffolk Law School, greets attorney Eddie J. Jenkins, a Suffolk Law School alumnus, class of 1978, at the opening reception for Long Road to Justice: The African American Experience in the Massachusetts Courts, held recently at Suffolk University Law School. The exhibit depicts how Massachusetts courts shaped – and were shaped by – the African American experience from the Colonial period to the present day. The exhibit, which is open to the public daily from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., free of charge, is located in the Adams Gallery at Suffolk University Law School, 120 Tremont St., Boston.

The Shawsheen Village Woman's Club met Monday, Feb. 3, at the Andover Historical Society. Chairpersons for the meeting were Patti-Lou Murray and Betty Klaiman.

Bob Frishman

Following a business meeting, the speaker, Bob Frishman, clock collector, repairman, and owner of Bell-Time Clocks in Andover, presented slides of many different antique clocks.

Frishman told the group that the "Tall Case Clock," the clock in the Historical Society meeting room, was made by Andover clockmaker Nathan Adams between 1780 and 1795.

The Woman's Club will meet next at Marland Place at 1:30 p.m. Monday, March 3.

The meeting will be a "Pound Auction and Ice Cream Social."

Ecocentrix Salon of Andover cut hair and raised funds for kids recently.

Alvarez set up shop at the Merrimack Valley YMCA's Child Care and Enrichment Center on Monday, Jan. 27, cutting children's and parents' hair and raising $450 for the center's enrichment activities.

Pictured receiving hair-cuts are Ram-phus Medina, 4, of Andover, and Nelson Hernandez, also 4, of Lawrence.

Not pictured, but also donating her time to cut hair, was Monica Carabello, also from Ecocentrix Salon.

"We will use the funds raised for additional enrichment activities for the children," said Christine Karlis, director of the YMCA's Child Care and Enrichment Center, located at 9 Ballard Way in Lawrence.

As the monthly celebrations have improved, De Sotomayer says he's seen the enthusiasm level increase, and residents take a greater role in the parties.

"Now we go all out (with the bottles)," he said. "I call them my elves. They make the event work out."

Everything from soda pouring to food serving is taken care of. He said there's a crew to prepare the room, another to wrap small presents and someone to cut the cake.

"For a community of elderly people, we are blessed to have the ones we have," said De Sotomayer.

Lawyers who learned to fly with CMGI have now left the nest

By Ethan Forman

THE PARTNERS OF A BRAND NEW LAW FIRM do not want to be known as a subsidiary of Internet company CMGI Inc. But Attorney Kevin P. Lanouette, 32, of Windham, N.H., and his two partners used to serve as three of CMGI's 16 in-house lawyers during the days when the company bought Internet startups and took them public at what seemed like light speed.

Lanouette, a Harvard Law School graduate, represented the company in over $5.5 billion worth of merger and acquisition activity.

And even though he and Thomas B. Rosedale, 30, used to work for a major Boston law firm, Hale and Dorr LLP, they cut their teeth at CMGI.

"We used to joke we had the best law firm north of Boston," said Lanouette, who described CMGI back then as "acquisition central."

"We saw more at this company in three years than you would ever see in a lifetime at General Mills," said Rosedale, who lives in Boston.

After January 2000, CMGI's stock value had a great fall. The attorneys who put CMGI together wound up using their expertise to take it apart and sell off companies they created.

"We are battle-tested now," Rosedale said. But Lanouette, Rosedale and Alfred L. Browne III became infected with the entrepreneurial bug that guided CMGI.

In September, the attorneys, all in their early 30s, struck out on their own and formed Brown Rosedale & Lanouette LLP – or BRL for short.

"We are not a captured CMGI outsourced legal department," said Lanouette said. "We have real clients."

They still retain CMGI as a major client. Lanouette acted as the company's inspector of elections at its recent shareholder meeting. Lanouette and Rosedale said they gained a perspective from their in-house experience of what a company needs when they hire a law firm.

BRL specializes in mergers and acquisitions, intellectual property rights, real estate and labor issues, said Lanouette, a father of a 5-year-old daughter, Rachel, and 3-year-old son, Ryan. It's a firm that an entrepreneur might turn to.

The lawyers said they are setting out at a time of upheaval among much larger, well-established law firms.

In December, the 106-year-old Boston law firm Hill & Barlow LLP voted to dissolve when a group of real estate lawyers decided to leave.

That event may signal a shake-out of other firms with 100 to 125 lawyers that have high rents and large salaries but not enough manpower to lure corporate clients, said Joseph P.J. Vrabel, president of the Massachusetts Bar Association.

"I think there is more room for smaller law firms than there is for large law firms," Vrabel said.

Today, small firms have an advantage over big ones.

"They can control their overhead. They can control their client base. They don't have to be all things to all people," he said. But finding the right niche can be a challenge, Vrabel said.

"There is space for a law firm like us because we are hitting a market that is completely under-served right now," Lanouette said.

Lanouette said the firm is finding clients among new companies that are filling the vacuum in Brickstone Square as CMGI gives back space.

"There are more companies in the Brickstone complex now than there was in 1999 when CMGI mostly filled the building," Lanouette said.

So far, the firm has attracted a company to help automate data collection for clinical trials, Lanouette said.

And it is not limited to technology companies. The attorneys are assisting a supermarket chain keep track of its software licenses. They have overseen six mergers and acquisitions transactions.

The firm has kept its startup costs low by picking up surplus telephones, computers, printers and furniture for "pennies on the dollar," Rosedale said.

Their offices in Brickstone Square consist of three offices and a conference room inside the halls of CMGI.

Also, to keep costs down, the firm does not have a library stocked with expensive law books.

Instead, the attorneys do their research online.

While CMGI still represents one-third of the fledgling firm's business, Rosedale and Lanouette said they have attracted enough clients through their connections to become an independent law firm.

"We are very fortunate to have CMGI as a client. They are exciting to work for," said Lanouette about his former boss and current client.

Survivor: Valentine's Day edition

Local florists bracing for their busiest day of the year

By Ben Hellman

FOR A FLORIST, Valentine's Day isn't just another day. Florists in Andover call the day "the busiest of the year." But with the coming onslaught of nervous husbands, wives, boyfriends, girlfriends, fiancés and others, Valentine's Day is more than that. Let's face it – for a florist, tomorrow is a test of survival.

"It's a nightmare for us," says Rebecca Tang, 14-year owner of Imagine That Florists. For Tang and other florists, Valentine's Day offers an extremely tight window to design, deliver and cater to lines stretching out the door.

"Everything has to happen in four to five hours," says Tang.

But it's worse than that, she says. Because the customers, whether they've ordered ahead or are buying last-minute, are wound tight and ready to snap. "There are a lot of emotions involved. If you're a little late, emotions run away," she says.

Ellen Lee, owner of KaBloom, plans to have all of her employees and most of her family in to help out tomorrow. "It's absolutely crazy, adrenaline-filled. You smile, you have fun, you get through it," she says.

Barry Dole, floral designer at Flowers by Steve, says the day will be non-stop arranging for him. "As fast as I can make them, the girls will sell them," he says. Dole and Lee will use vans, a Ryder truck and other means just to store the extra flowers.

Lee ordered 1,200 dozen-bunches of roses. Dole says last year his shop sold 2,500 roses the week of Valentine's Day and 1,000 on the 14th.

Ray Olia, owner of Paradise Flowers, stressed that Valentine's Day is the most important day of the year for his business. His biggest concern: snow. "Hopefully the weather will be good," says Olia.

IN BRIEF

Merrimack board welcomes Ohanian

The Merrimack College board of trustees recently elected Andover resident Michael Ohanian to the board, which is comprised of 24 business and community leaders who oversee the general government and direction of the college.

Michael Ohanian

Ohanian serves as president emeritus of Intermec Technologies Corp., a manufacturer of bar code and radio frequency identification (RFID) products and services for the global industrial markets. He joined Intermec, located in Everett, Wash., in 1987 as vice president of government programs and was promoted to president in 1995 and served in that position until his retirement in December 1999.

Prior to Intermec, he held senior management positions at Martin Marietta (now Lockheed Martin), Litton Industries and Raytheon.

He is establishing courses in bar code and RFID technology, providing books, equipment and training materials at the University in Armenia, and also providing humanitarian aid to several orphanages in Armenia.

Ohanian holds a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from Merrimack College and attended Northeastern University.

Two make news at Fred C. Church

Debbie Coady of North Andover, an employee of Fred C. Church Inc.'s Andover office, has achieved a professional milestone, having completed the certified insurance service representative (CISR) program. Coady, of North Andover, has been with the agency since November 1982 and is a personal lines senior account representative.

The CISR program emphasizes the understanding and analysis of risks and exposures. It consists of five one-day courses that cover all phases of a customer service representative's daily work.

Lisa Hunzelman of Andover has joined the staff of Fred C. Church Insurance. Hunzelman joins Church's Lowell headquarters as a marketing assistant in the commercial lines department. Hunzelman brings with her many years of experience in administrative services and commercial underwriting, according to the company.

11 school nurses see 13 percent raise over 3 years

By Ben Hellman

AS ANDOVER LOOKS FOR ANSWERS to its financial difficulties, the school department last week agreed to a 13-percent salary increase over three years and tuition reimbursements for school nurses. The contract represents a very small portion of the school budget, as it affects the district's four registered nurses.

The three-year RN contract began retroactively and is now in its second year. It is divided into step increases of 4 percent for the first year, paid retroactively for last year; 4 percent for the current school year, the second year; and 5 percent for the final year, which

School business manager Bernie Tuttle said he included these salary increases when he created the superintendent's preliminary budget. Registered nurses' salaries range from $33,969 to $42,733.

The registered nurses also negotiated an increase in when a longevity bonus will be paid.

Instead of waiting 10 years for longevity to kick in, registered nurses will now get $1,000 salary increases after eight, 13 and 18 years. In addition $3,000 is set aside for nurses to take graduate courses, said Tuttle.

The licensed practical nurses contract settlement — a settlement with a different group of nurses — was also announced last week and is also a 4-, 4-, 5-percent increase over three years, starting retroactively in September 2001.

Andover has seven LPNs ranging in salary from $21,155 to $31,089. The LPNs also negotiated a $150 tuition reimbursement per nurse, not to exceed $1,050. Both RNs and LPNs have been working without a new contract for a year.

Next year's 5-percent increase for all nurses matches the 5-percent increase teachers will see next year.

The 5-percent teachers' increase has been mentioned by some town and school officials as being particularly painful given the tight budget.

Tina Girdwood, School Committee chairwoman, said the current school year's lower 3.1-percent increase for teachers was agreed to because officials knew that opening two new schools this year would present budget challenges. She said there was no way to anticipate the rough times expected next year.

"It seemed like a reasonable thing to do back then," she said.

WHAT'S UP

School-choice idea mulled

■ GRADE LEVELS

if all of the kindergarten to grade 3 classrooms were raised to the middle of the superintendent's class-size policy, Andover could welcome more than 120 out-of-town students and collect more than $588,000.

The midpoint of the superintendent's policy would mean 20 students per classroom in kindergarten, 23 students per classroom in grades 1 and 2 and 25 students per classroom in grade 3.

An incoming student's community would add $4,900 to Andover's coffers by a state aid adjustment. The amount is calculated at 75 percent of what Andover spends per student in the district.

Two of five School Committee members have spoken in favor of school choice. Gerry Gustus said he has been the lone supporter for the past two years because he believes it would add diversity to the schools. Christopher Smith, who has not yet voted on school choice as the committee's newest member, said at last week's meeting that school choice could help the schools raise money. Contacted on Tuesday, he said the long-term implications also need to be considered.

The remaining members were reluctant to speak before they discuss the issue at their next meeting. Dick Collins, a lifelong teacher, expressed reservations because the program takes the best students from poorer school systems. "As an educator I have trouble with that concept. Your system is as good as your kids," said Collins. Outgoing member Skip Eccles, another lifelong teacher, declined to be quoted, but expressed similar reservations.

Chairwoman Tina Girdwood did not take a stance, but given the sudden possibility of school choice because of the new schools said, "You really have to think about it."

Sanborn and West elementary schools have classrooms below the midpoint of the superintendent's enrollment policy and could be the most affected by the change. Sanborn Principal Stephen Jankauskas had meetings with parents this week about school choice and expected to meet with other town principals this week.

Jankauskas reserved comment before he spoke with parents and principals, but was concerned about class sizes. He said the unpredictability of student enrollments was something to consider in making a decision.

The question of school choice is voted on every year by the School Committee, but tight classroom space has caused previous committees to vote it down. With the opening of the new schools and massive cuts to staff and programs in the superintendent's preliminary budget this year, school choice is being given more serious consideration than usual.

In an unlikely scenario, the schools would reap $1,974,700 if classroom sizes were boosted to the high-water mark of the superintendent's policy. It is an unlikely prospect because the administration has made classroom size, especially in elementary schools, a top priority.

Members of the campus chapter of Habitat for Humanity at a planning meeting earlier this week.

Housing program attracts 100 at AHS

By Kyra Auffermann

WHEN STUDENT KATIE MARTORANA started a campus chapter of Habitat for Humanity at Andover High School, she says she would have been happy if 20 people showed interest. Instead, the initial meeting, held in January, yielded more than 100 students interested in joining the club.

"Habitat is such a unique organization because it deals with the issues of substandard housing and increasingly high rent prices faced by many of our neighbors. It gives us a way to help others in a direct way not often experienced by Andover students," says Martorana, a senior at Andover High, and president of the Andover High campus chapter of Habitat for Humanity. Involved with the organization since her sophomore year, when she helped as a volunteer, she was able to introduce a high school chapter this winter after undergoing the strictly regulated, six-phase application process required by the organization.

Martorana believes the initial success indicates the chapter will likely thrive at AHS, whose students have a proclivity toward community service.

"I wanted to be a part of Habitat to help the community and to be a part of something," says junior Richa Goyal, who is a member.

The international organization is designed to provide support and education for the issues addressed through the organization, primarily to produce housing for those who most need assistance due to varying circumstances. Habitat distinguishes itself from an often overwhelming sea of repetitive, but well intentioned, charitable organizations by placing the emphasis on action — beyond the traditional fund-raising drives, which are an integral component to any successful program. Habitat is able to directly and tangibly make a measurable difference. The AHS campus chapter's goals are to educate the local community, raise funds and foster a close partnership with their Lawrence affiliate, paving the way for a productive future.

Martorana is currently the president of the AHS campus chapter, and the vice president is Sheri Bernstein, also a senior. They're assisted by a core group of members, referred to as the board, consisting of three secretaries and two representatives chairing each of the three main committees: education, fund-raising and building. The education committee is working to produce a campus chapter newsletter, tentatively titled Habitat Happenings, to raise awareness and promote upcoming events; the fund-raising committee is experimenting with different possibilities for future implementation, ranging from traditional bake sales to more experimental, building-themed ideas, and the building committee already has established three tentative building dates, with the earliest March 15, depending whether enough adult chaperones are available.

Currently, the club is selling AHS Habitat for Humanity campus chapter sweatshirts for $35 at the high school, with a sign-up sheet for those interested posted on the door of the Community Service office.

For more information regarding the Habitat for Humanity organization, visit its Web site at www.habitat.org. For details regarding the Andover High campus chapter, contact Katie Martorana at 978-475-8328.

BELMONT:

Aaa-bonded/school-choice community

By Ben Hellman

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF BELMONT, currently the only Aaa-rated town in Massachusetts to take students from other communities as part of the school-choice program, wants to expand the program next year.

Belmont School Superintendent Peter Holland said in the six months that Belmont has accepted students from other towns, there has not been a major problem.

"We did it just because of the cost," said Holland. Belmont has passed property-tax overrides for two years. Belmont's school-choice program brings in $145,860 for the district. It currently teaches 30 students from other districts. Holland said half of the students Belmont has taken in are from surrounding communities, and the rest are from Boston.

Though he recommended against school choice last year and was overruled by the Belmont School Committee, after a six-month trial Holland now says, "It's worked reasonably well." Next month, he plans to recommend expanding the program from just the high school to all levels.

Belmont hasn't completely embraced the program. "Not everybody likes it," said Holland. Some residents resent outsiders coming into town and enjoying the benefits that Belmont's property taxes pay for, he said.

Holland said the program also isn't popular with superintendents in school districts that lose money. "They say 'You're robbing students.' That's not our purpose. Our purpose is, we have to fund the district we have," he said.

Student enrollment in Belmont is 3,678 — slightly more than half of Andover's 5,963.

LADDERS OF SUCCESS

In keeping with Sanborn's Science Matters theme for this year's curriculum, the school's third-, fourth- and fifth-grade students were visited by Garry Krinsky, who recently performed "Toying with Science" at the school. Krinsky demonstrated the scientific principles of gravity by balancing five ladders on his chin (above). "The students were able to investigate basic scientific information and delve into the imaginations of scientists who explore our world," organizers said. Krinsky "wowed" the students with his performance, they added.

Valentine's Day: From Andover, with love

How does Andover prepare? By buying last-minute jewelry, selecting huge cards and eating

By Andrea Gregory

JEWELRY

Last-minute buy for many

For many in Andover, Valentine's Day gift buying is a last-minute affair – and that's normally true for jewelry as well as flowers.

But this year customers were buying for the big day up to three weeks in advance, said Paula Leed, co-president of Royal Jewelers.

"This year they started early," she said, adding it is often a last-minute holiday.

Diamonds may be a girl's best friend, but Leed says she believes in fitting jewelry into a lifestyle. She'll ask her customers about the person receiving the gift before suggesting something. According to her, their David Yurman collection is popular this year, especially the special line called pink tourmaline.

"People like to buy pink or red or hearts," Leed said, mentioning items popular around Valentine's Day.

Across the street, Nazarian's salesman Don Mullin said their Valentine's Day shoppers are predominately male.

"I bet 75 percent of Valentine's Day sales come in the last few days. Guys procrastinate," he said.

Sales is about personal preference, but according to Mullin you can't go wrong with earrings.

"Earrings are like shoes," said Mullin. "You can never have enough."

He says while Valentine's Day may be a busy time of year it can't really compare to Christmas.

"The Christmas season starts right after Thanksgiving. The Valentine's Day season starts two days before," he said. In addition, people are usually buying for one on Valentine's Day, rather than many.

"I think Valentine's Day brings out all those people who realize they need a gift," said Quiet Pleasures owner Kay Demaso. "They're looking for a nice remembrance for the day."

She agrees with Mullin about this time of year bringing out the male shoppers, but says she had some mothers shopping for their daughters. She also says earrings are a safe way to go, and usually less expensive. According to her, amethyst – the February birth stone – is an acceptable and popular alternative to the traditional pinks and reds.

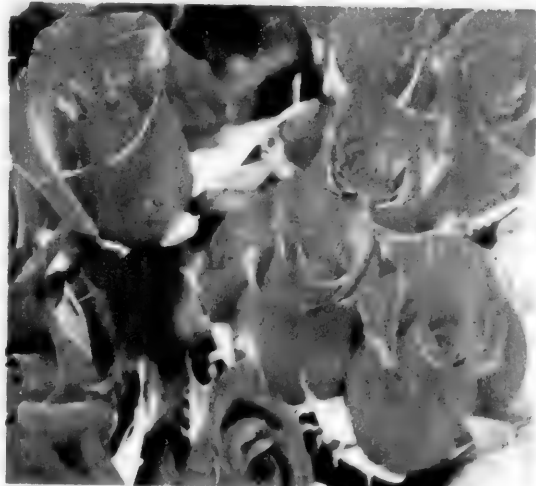

"It's one of those rich colors with a rich look," she said about the purple stone. "It flies out of here."

Gold necklaces from Nazarian's

Vicky Anson – and other Andover flower merchants – won't have time to stop and smell the roses on Friday. Related story, page 12.

CANDY

Sweets abound

A look at Andover's top candy sellers shows that Andover valentines like their edible treats as much as anyone else.

If you're looking for heart shaped boxes filled with candy and other edible treats, Sweet Mimi's at 10 Post Office Ave. has pink and white baskets hanging from the ceiling and the lingering aroma of chocolate. "Chocolate truffles and turtle are the most popular items we sell," said Mimi Queen. "Everybody has their favorite candy. A lot of customers we know and know what their favorites are." For those who still aren't sure on what to buy Queen suggests a pizza heart, milk chocolate topped with butter crunch, caramel and cashews.

CVS on Main Street would not reveal what their top selling candies are, but they must sell well as an entire aisle is dedicated to red and pink boxes filled with chocolates and heart holding stuffed animals. Rosemary Ellis, after getting off of work at the Andover Inn, was browsing the candy selection and she said she was tempted to buy for herself. Years ago Ellis used to work for a CVS and still recalls the last minute Valentine's Day crowd. "The day of all the guys used to come in rushing around looking for something," she said.

CARDS & GIFTS

For men, size is everything

Residents in love at the very least buy a card.

"I find people getting more romantic," says Cheryl Brasher, manager of Cardsmart, an Andover store armed with love letters and plenty of pretty bows and packaging, all at 50 percent off.

She says the workers have a good time with Valentine's Day at her store.

Her favorite thing is when a little boy buys a present for his mother.

She says men of all ages buy the biggest thing they can find. This year, the store brought in musical cards about three times the size of a normal card with a male target audience in mind.

"We always have some handsome young man who wants to buy the biggest teddy bear," said Brasher.

As far as sales on concerned she says this holiday is second to Christmas. "A holiday that celebrates love can't be bad," she said before mentioning the last-minute line they're expecting to run the length of the store.

In search of ... valentines

Donald McCandless 20 Ravens Bluff

Valentine's Day is one of those holidays that seem innocent and simple on the outside but, like some chocolates, can be very dangerous on the inside.

One Valentine's Day eve my daughter had to find cards for her classmates but she hadn't gotten around to it, what with her busy 11-year-old schedule, which included homework, soccer, play rehearsals, a bead necklace and earring business, countless phone conversations and a new set of "jaw stretchers" that she was wearing in preparation for braces.

Let me take you back: She doesn't have a card for her mother, or 32 other people, including every child in her class, her homeroom teacher, her math teacher and the four friends in other classes with whom she regularly talks on the phone and hangs out with at lunch, recess and most sleepovers. Of course with all the homework she has, good old dad has been elected to find those precious cards and, in so doing, preserve her reputation as a kind, thoughtful and generous person.

My search begins at 6 p.m. at the 24-hour CVS in town. Not a single package of cards is left

However, I overhear a conversation about another drugstore in town that had some left just a few minutes ago. I race to my car to head off the competition. When I arrive at that store it's too late. The cards are all gone there too! I fare no better at the actual card store next door.

"You mean there isn't one kid's Valentine's Day card left in Andover?" I ask in exasperation. The clerk gives me a sickly smile as she answers. "I guess not."

"I didn't know there was so much love passing among the kinds in school these days," I mutter.

Trying to shake off this cynical attitude, as well as the fear beginning to creep up my gut that I might fail in my quest, I set off for the last-chance store in the next town. Time is running out.

On the way I start thinking of alternatives if I don't find any cards. Maybe she could make a big poster with a heart at the top, a nice, Valentine-y saying in the middle, and all the kid's names all over it in red glitter. Wouldn't that be nice, I say to myself unconvincedly. Then I hear my daughter's probable response in my head.

"Oh my gosh, Dad, I couldn't do that! That would be the worst thing ever! They'd laugh at me! Valentine's Day is ruined!"

Card shark finds prey

As I pass by a fast-food restaurant and see people placidly waiting in line for their dinner I begin to feel pangs of hunger on top of a growing self-pity.

I'm driving furiously now, not at all the way I will expect my soon-to-be 16-year-old son to drive. When I reach the shopping center parking lot I drive right over the neatly painted lines and park at an angle across three spaces, something I would normally never do. I then jump out and charge into the last-chance store. I can hardly see, I'm in such a state. Then, suddenly, there they are! Cards! Kid's Valentine Day cards! Boxes and boxes! Nice, kitschy, cheap, unimaginative cards in garish colors with really vanilla sayings on them like "You really send me" and "I've got a thing for you." I'm suddenly depressed, though. I found what I was looking for but not what I want. Just then I hear two women talking to each other in the next aisle. The first woman says, "How about these cards? Do your kids like Ren and Stimpy?"

"I'll call them to find out if they do or not," is the reply.

I'm stunned. I want those cards. I know my daughter wants them. We've watched Ren and Stimpy together often. It's almost a Sunday morning tradition. I wonder where this woman got those cards. I look everywhere but can't find any more of them on the shelves. I almost ask directions, I'm so crazed, but I get hold of myself and avoid violating the male code of conduct for just a little while longer. I search all over once more, even looking in the deodorant aisle, the candy aisle, the headache aisle and the checkout counter. No luck.

Suddenly the second woman is back and the first woman is saying, "Well, I guess it was a good thing you called," as she returns the Ren and Stimpy cards to the rack.

I am ecstatic! I race over and grab the package, quickly brushing past another father just as his glazed eyes were beginning to focus on my prize. I pay for the cards and begin to think that this experience wasn't so bad after all. I bring them home and present them to my daughter. Miracle of miracle, she smiles as she pronounces one word: "Awesome."

As much as I detest the overuse of that word, at this point I am happy that she is happy. Then I remember something. I have to get those jeans into the dryer. A parent's work is never done, but it does have some big, I might even say awesome, rewards.

AHS ROUNDUP

Agony of defeat

Golden Warriors and Lady Warriors are victimized by Central Catholic in a pair of stunning losses; stellar performances on the girls gymnastics team

By Rick Harrison

The most eventful week of the Andover High winter sports season brought a mixed bag of results.

On the plus side, the undeniably reliable girls gymnastics team won both the dual-meet and Merrimack Valley Conference Championship Meet titles for the fourth straight year.

The AHS boys and girls basketball teams, carrying a combined record of 30-1 to the court in back-to-back games against Central Catholic, both lost heartbreakers.

In a battle that somehow surpassed the considerable pre-game hype — the AHS boys lost an emotion-filled 62-61 overtime thriller to Central Catholic before a vocal, foot-stomping SRO crowd at the Dunn Gym.

The level of play throughout the roller-coaster ride was spectacular — especially considering what was at stake for both teams.

Both were undefeated in conference play, while the Golden Warriors entered at 15-1 overall (12 straight wins) and Central was 15-0.

By winning the heart-pounding, latest classic in this rivalry, Central slipped into the MVC Division I driver's seat by taking sole possession of first place.

Fans won't have to wait long for the rematch scheduled next Wednesday night at Central.

The Andover girls saw their shot at a perfect regular season go up in smoke, as they were unpleasantly surprised by upset-minded Central. 53-50, to snap a lengthy conference win streak.

Both hoop teams rebounded Tuesday night with wins against Haverhill, the boys overcoming a slow start on the way to a 66-47 victory and the girls once again rallying late against the Hillies to register a 60-58 overtime triumph.

The final showdown of the week came on the track, where Andover was denied the MVC I title after a 52-34 loss to Chelmsford.

There was cause for celebration elsewhere on the track, as standouts Phil Shaw and Stephanie Casper both smashed AHS records at the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury.

Shaw broke Tim Galebach's mark in the mile while competing against seven other top distance runners from Massachusetts in the Elite High School Mile at the Boston Indoor Track and Field Games.

Shaw placed third in the race, three seconds behind the winner, and his 4-minute, 21.29-second time eclipsed Galebach's record (set in 2001) by about one second.

Shaw's performance came on the heels of his recent Herculean effort in a dual meet against Phillips Academy, where he won the 1000 run (2:26.6), the mile (4:48.3) and the two mile (10:00.9) in the same afternoon.

Casper broke the oldest girls indoor track record on the Andover books, smashing Maggie Meyers' 30-year-old mark in the 600 yard run.

Competing in the 600 meters at the State Coaches Invitational, Casper covered the 600-yard distance in 1:26.1 to best Meyers' 1:29.0 by almost three seconds.

She went on to place second in the 600 meters in 1:37.96.

BOYS BASKETBALL

Former longtime Andover High assistant varsity hoop coach Bob Hatem undoubtedly would have been proud.

Hatem, who succumbed to colon cancer last Friday after a year-long battle, was in some measure responsible for the inspired performance by AHS in its heralded long war against Central Catholic.

The Golden Warriors gave the No. 2 ranked team in Eastern Massachusetts almost more than it could handle before dropping the 62-61 overtime thriller.

Coach Dave Fazio and his troops would have loved to ring this one up in the victory column for coach Hatem. Nevertheless, the effort extended was a fitting tribute and made a winner of every Golden Warrior who stepped on the court.

Tuesday's subsequent 66-47 win over Haverhill boosted the locals to 16-2 overall and 11-1 in MVC.

Schedule

Andover hosts unpredictable Lowell tonight (7:30 p.m.) and plays in the highly-competitive AT&T Broadband Tournament with Charlestown, Brookline and B.C. High this Saturday and Sunday at B.C. High in Dorchester. AHS battles top-ranked B.C. High in the semifinal round.

The MIAA Division I North Tournament pairings are scheduled for release Friday, Feb. 21.

Scoring leaders

Chris Vetrano has 389 points through 18 games (21.6 ave.), while Jack Barrett boasts 230 points and Kevin Barrett 214.

Vetrano has 1,399 career points as he closes in on Tom McLaughlin's AHS boys record of 1,564 scored in three seasons between 1997-2000.

Charlotte Muller's 1,600 points are the most ever for all AHS hoop players, boys and girls.

Andover 66 Haverhill 47

The Hillies threw a brief early scare into Andover, launching and hitting several three-pointers that sparked the home team to a 10-point lead in the opening minutes.

But AHS, possibly suffering a slight letdown from the Central game, regrouped and battled back with some sturdy defense that helped cool Haverhill off.

By halftime the Golden Warriors owned a 33-29 lead, and they held Haverhill to a mere 18 points in the final 16 minutes.

Jack Barrett had an outstanding game with an 18-point, 13-rebound double-double.

Chris Vetrano contributed 16 points and seven boards, while Jon Deleo also reached twin figures with 12 points.

Tyler Richards tossed in eight points, Kevin Barrett six, Drew Watts four and Jarrett Mackin netted a basket.

Watts also pulled down eight rebounds and quality minutes were provided off the bench by junior guards Manny Venuti, Steve Renfro and freshman forward Bobby Hughes.

Mike Sughrue paced Haverhill with 15 points and Andy Ryan had nine.

Central Catholic 62 Andover 61 (ot)

The Golden Warriors appeared to have this bruising, defense-dominated game under control, leading by 11 points with less than five minutes to play.

But the Raiders closed out regulation with a gritty 13-2 run that tied the game 57-57 and forced overtime.

Central led throughout the extra period to escape with its third one-point win of the season.

Youthful Andover, which has only three seniors on its talented roster, outthrustled and out-muscled slightly-favored Central for most of the night and built that 55-44 lead at 11:12 of the second half.

But Central, digging in on the defensive end and finding its second wind, poured salve on its wounded pride and struggled back into contention as Willis Martinez scored seven points, Marquis Victor added a basket and point-guard Jeremy Shannon converted a three-point play.

Andover could only counter the late onslaught with a Drew Watts 12-foot jumper, and with four seconds left in regulation Dan O'Shea was fouled on a putback and sank one free throw to tie it.

Shannon gave the Raiders a lead in overtime and O'Shea added three points. A pair of Kevin Barrett buckets provided the answering fire for AHS, but a three-pointer that would have tied it in the final minute circled the hoop.

Central escaped despite missing a pair of free throws in the closing seconds.

Chris Vetrano led all scorers on both sides with 20 points, while Barrett brothers Kevin and Jack finished with 16 and 11 respectively.

Drew Watts tossed in six points, and was tough off the boards along with Jack Barrett and Tyler Richards, and Jon Deleo converted a pair of free throws.

The balanced Central attack was led by O'Shea with 14 points, freshman Jonathan Cruz 13 and Victor 12.

The series has produced a lot of must-see games over the years.

The Golden Warriors have won five of the last eight, but since the 1989-90 season Central owns an overall 18-12 advantage.

Andover 50 Brockton 47

Nicely avoiding the temptation to look past Brockton, Andover hung tough and played some spectacular defense in this seesaw battle at the Dunn Gym.

The triumph snapped a two-game losing streak to the Boxers and squared the recent series between the teams at 2-2.

The Golden Warriors held a slim 27-26 half-time edge, and rarely were the teams separated by more than three points after the break.

The game was knotted 44-44 with 1:30 left when Chris Vetrano drained a clutch three-pointer.

The Boxers' top gun, P.J. Bernard, countered with a trey of his own on a desperation off-balance heave that banked off the glass with one second left on the shot clock.

Drew Watts followed with a 12-foot jumper for the eventual winning points, giving the locals a 49-47 lead with 45 seconds to play.

Bernard missed a three-pointer a short time later and Watts ripped down the rebound.

Jack Barrett was fouled on the in-bounds pass with nine seconds left, and he hit one free throw to make it 50-47.

Solid AHS defense forced Brockton to throw up a potential overtime-forcing prayer at the buzzer that was not answered.

Vetrano led the Andover attack with 16 points, and he passed out six assists, while Kevin Barrett contributed 11 points.

Tyler Richards tossed in nine points and corralled a team-high 13 rebounds.

Watts and Jack Barrett finished with six points each, with Watts adding four steals and four blocked shots.

Jon Deleo had two points and joined Jarrett Mackin and Bobby Hughes with strong floor games.

Chris Gibbs was game-high with 17 points for the Boxers and Bernard had 11.

Last winter Brockton outgunned Andover 80-77 in Brockton, and two years ago the Boxers rolled to a 76-61 victory against the locals.

AHS last beat Brockton 69-60 at home in 1999-2000.

Andover 76 Methuen 64

The Golden Warriors had their hands full with a wounded Methuen team, humbled and still smarting from Andover's 80-46 romp a week earlier.

You just don't forget 34-point losses quickly.

"Methuen had something to prove," said coach Fazio. "They played hard and they played well."

"This was a good team win for us. (Chris) Vetrano controlled the game. Jack Barrett rebounded well. And both Kevin Barrett and (Jon) Deleo did a terrific defensive job against their two big guns (Ryan Middlemiss and Nick Reusch)."

Vetrano, who had back-to-back career-high 40-point games last season, pumped in a season-best 37 in this one. He buried four three-pointers, hit a sizzling 15-of-16 at the free throw line and picked off five steals.

The Barrett brothers contributed 11 points each, with Jack adding seven assists and six rebounds.

Drew Watts produced eight points and seven rebounds, Tyler Richards had four points, Deleo and Bobby Hughes a basket each and Manny Venuti converted a free throw.

Middlemiss managed just one field goal and seven total points for the Rangers, while Reusch's only offense was a three-pointer.

"We had to be scrappy tonight," said Fazio. "We scraped, clawed, kicked and escaped with the win."

Both teams finished with 21 field goals. Methuen held an 8-4 edge in threes, but AHS hit 30-of-41 free throws to just 12-of-19 for Methuen.

GIRLS GYMNASTICS

For the fourth straight year the Andover High girls gymnastics team swept the Merrimack Valley Conference dual-meet and Championship Meet titles.

The Lady Warriors scorched a seven-school field in the All-League Meet at the Methuen High Field House, chalking up 134.85 points on the way to a convincing victory.

Three days earlier AHS won its eighth MVC dual-meet championship in the last 12 years, completing an undefeated 2003 season as Sheri Bernstein, Libby Fortier and Katie Cail led a 139.15 to 134.35 romp over runner-up Chelmsford at the Dunn Gym.

Coach Julie Chapman's crew finished 12-0 overall, including 6-0 in the MVC, and her teams have now won 33 consecutive dual meets since a 135.55 to 133.60 loss to Methuen on Feb. 4, 1999.

They are also 95-5 in their last 100 meets and 116-13 since the middle of the 1989 season.

Schedule

Next up is the North Sectional Championship Meet scheduled tomorrow night at Beverly High (6 p.m.).

The top teams at Sectionals will qualify for the annual All-State Team Championships on Saturday, Feb. 22 at Foxboro High.

The season-ending State Individual Championships are Friday, February 28 at Beverly High.

The North Sectional seeding meeting was yesterday, after Townsmen presstime, and coach Chapman felt Andover would be seeded third or fourth.

"The strongest competition in this area (of the state) should come from Danvers and Beverly," said Chapman. "Having the meet at Beverly High is a big advantage for both those teams because they know the gym and the equipment."

In the south, Barnstable recently broke Andover's state dual-meet scoring record with a 144. The previous mark was 143.80 by the Lady Warriors in last year's season finale against Shrewsbury (Feb. 3, 2002).

"I couldn't believe the Barnstable score when I saw it," said Chapman. "They've been scoring in the mid-130's all season. Suddenly they come up with a 144?"

"We just set the record last year and I would have liked to hold on to it a little longer," noted Chapman.

MVC Championship Meet

Although not quite at the top of their game, the Andover gymnasts still had more than enough talent and depth to best the seven-school field by more than three points.

The Lady Warriors' 134.85 score easily held off runner-up Chelmsford which finished at 131.45.

Dracut was a close third at 131.20, Tewksbury fourth (130.825) and rounding out the standings were host Methuen (126.75), Lowell (118.00) and Billerica (112.25).

Andover was led by senior Capt. Sheri Bernstein, who placed second in floor exercise (9.1) and third on balance beam (8.85).

She tied for fourth on both the uneven bars (8.5) and in vault (8.4), and her 34.85 all-around total was good for third place.

Sophomore Libby Fortier contributed a third in vault (8.65) and a tie for fourth (with Bernstein) on bars (8.5).

She also scored an 8.8 in floor and 8.0 on beam for 33.95 and fifth place all-around.

Andover was the only team with two gymnasts placing top six in the all-around.

Capt. Katie Cail tied for sixth in floor (8.9) and scored 8.1 on beam and 7.6 on bars.

Freshman Katie Infantino also competed in three events for the champs, registering an 8.7 in floor, 8.35 in vault and 7.9 on bars.

Sophomore Meghan Harrington chalked up an 8.15 in vault and 7.7 on beam, while sophomore AnnMarie Cashman recorded an 8.1 on beam and 7.3 on bars.

Freshman Sarah Coneyen scored 7.7 on bars, while junior Andrea Krivelow posted a 7.7 on beam, sophomore Lauren Reed 8.3 and Chapman felt Andover would be seeded third or

PRESIDENTS DAY AUTO

Car care 101: A lesson in preservation

New or used, vintage or modern, people have depended on their cars as a means of survival ever since the automobile first was introduced.

While cars have evolved significantly over time, and their build greatly refined, the ideas behind the way cars work have remained mostly intact.

Cars were powered by steam and electricity until early this century, however, neither proved to be practical power sources. Electric cars frequently had to be stopped in order to recharge their heavy batteries. Steam cars, though offering a smoother power, were difficult to use.

By 1876, variations on the early engine had led to the best method of ensuring that the engine operated smoothly while keeping exhaust emissions at a controllable level.

According to the "Ultimate Visual Dictionary" (DK), today's gasoline engines function according to the same basic principles as the first car engines of a century ago. While modern engines are lighter, thanks to the special metal alloys they are made from, today's combustion engines use the same four-stroke cycle first demonstrated in 1876.

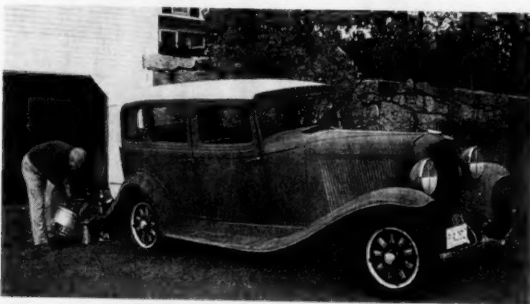

Granted, the creation of computerized ignition systems, fuel injectors and multi-valve cylinder heads have enabled modern engines to achieve more efficient combustion, allowing for less fuel to be wasted.

Additionally, the level of pollution in the exhaust gases of modern engines is much lower, due to the increasing use of special pollutant-absorbing filters called catalytic converters.

As a result of improvements like these, modern engines offer better power and cleaner, more efficient performance than earlier variations.

History has proven that the creation of a more efficient engine is a timely, not to mention expensive undertaking. However, taking care of a car doesn't have to be.

So, no matter how old that car in the garage may be, there's a valuable lesson to be learned in respecting the elderly as it pertains to car care and preservation. Setting aside a little time for car maintenance on a regular basis will help get the most mileage from a car, and depending on the car's age and make, it could bring lasting value as well.

Cars may have evolved by leaps and bounds over the past 100 years or so, however, the basic principles behind how they work have remained mostly intact. The principles behind preserving a car's life span haven't changed much either and can be as simple as preparing a bucket of soapy water for a much-needed car wash.

Take a ride down memory lane

Remember when cars were not required to have automatic seat belts or air bags? How about when a new car cost less than $600?

Today's cars are a lot more advanced than ever before.

The following events, courtesy of "Chronicle of the 20th Century" (DK), are some highlights of important events in the development of the modern car.

April 1908 - U.S. Steel begins producing all-metal automobile wheels.

June 1919 - New York inaugurates a written test for driver's license applicants.

November 1927 - The price for a new Ford automobile jumps almost $200 from $385 to $570.

February 1930 - Traffic lights are installed at Manhattan, N.Y., intersections to protect pedestrians and drivers.

January 1938 - General Motors Corp. begins mass production of diesel engines.

September 1948 - The Cadillac comes complete with a two-piece curved windshield, a wide rear window, tail fins inspired by Lockheed's P-38 fighter aircraft and a Hydramatic automatic transmission.

July 1952 - GM offers cars with an air cooling system.

March 1960 - In New York, a car is displayed with a battery recharged by solar cells.

December 1970 - President Nixon signs a bill to cut automobile fumes 90 percent by 1977.

March 1971 - Ford Motor Co. recalls Pintos due to an engine defect.

January 1974 - President Nixon signs a bill for a 55 mph ceiling on the speed limit.

January 1975 - Chrysler, GM and Ford - the "Big Three" American automobile makers - offer rebates to customers in an attempt to spur the sales of new cars.

September 1980 - The Chevy Chevette, Ford Escort and Lincoln Mercury Lynx are the first U.S. cars to record 30 miles per gallon.

July 1984 - United States announces air bags or automatic seat belts are required in cars by 1989.

July 1984 - New York institutes the nation's first mandatory seat-belt law.

Make time for simple auto checks

Unless a car is making strange noises or emitting foul-smelling fumes, people can perform a simple weekly car check on their own vehicle in a matter of minutes.

Following are some basic items one should be sure to check on a weekly basis, courtesy of "The Pocket Idiot's Guide to Car Repair" (alpha books), by Dan Ramsey.

• Oil level - Circulated in the engine, oil keeps the car's engine parts lubricated and prevents them from wearing out. When the engine is off, the oil settles to the oil pan under the hood. The oil-pan stick will indicate the oil level and whether or not the oil needs to be refilled.

• Coolant level - A mixture of antifreeze fluid and water, coolant (located under the hood of the car) circulates throughout the car's engine to remove excess heat. It then circulates throughout the radiator, where the airflow cools it before it returns through the engine.

• Windshield-washer fluid level - Stored in a container beneath the hood of the car. Make sure the fluid never falls below its appropriate level.

• Power-steering fluid level - If a car has power steering, power-steering fluid is what makes the car easier to steer with less effort. The fluid usually is stored in a reservoir under the car's hood.

• Brake fluid levels - Hydraulic fluid, or brake fluid, is used by the car's hydraulic system to magnify the pressure of your foot on the brake pedal to stop the car. The fluid is located in the master brake cylinder, usually under the hood of the car.

• Tires and pressure - Under inflated tires reduce fuel economy, while excessive pressure makes tires wear unevenly. The tire gauge indicates how much pressure is in the tire and whether more air is needed.

Did You Know ... ?

Tuesday is the best day to fill up your gas tank. "With the weekend long gone and the work week already revved up, business is slower at service stations. You might even get the windows washed."
